Professor Robert Gudmestad, Chair

Undergraduate History majors at CSU find an engaged community of peers and professors who want to explore the past. Our curriculum allows students to follow and expand their interests. CSU History faculty challenge students, helping them build critical thinking, research, and communication skills in the classroom and apply those skills in the world.

Our faculty is invested in student success beyond the classroom, through independent study and internship opportunities that lead to career opportunities in a variety of fields to become public land managers, public policy advisors and consultants, researchers, archivists, teachers, and more.

Graduate students take rigorous seminars, pursue internships, and work with professional public historians to build a range of skills. Some go on to PhD programs and many enter the workforce as historians, cultural resource managers, city planners, library and archive professionals, park interpreters, and teachers. Our graduate alumni join an active, growing network of people with careers from the National Library of Congress to the Grand Rapids Museum.

Graduate Programs in History

The Department of History at CSU chooses a select group of students each year for its Master of Arts program in History and in Public History. Earning an M.A. in History at CSU is a step toward any number of exciting future paths including:

- A successful career in public history working for Federal or state agencies, in consulting, for non-profits and communities, and more. Our concentration in Cultural Resource Management & Historic Preservation is nationally renowned and has a high job placement rate.
- Advancing the careers and deepening the knowledge base of social studies and history teachers.
- Pursuing a Ph.D. in a field in which our faculty has expertise. We have a considerable concentration of established historians who study U.S. History, Public History, and Environmental History.

We offer three programs of study in which students can earn their M.A.:

- Write a thesis on Plan A.
- Earn your degree without a thesis on Plan B.
- Specialize in Cultural Resource Management & Historic Preservation.

Regardless of the program of study students select, they will work closely with one another and with the department's faculty mentors. Our department is committed to high-quality mentoring and to providing hands-on experience through internships, service-learning projects, and paid research positions at the Public and Environmental History Center (PEHC) (<https://pehc.colostate.edu/>). (<https://publiclands.colostate.edu/>) Although our curriculum is geographically based, the content of our graduate seminars explores themes of gender & sexuality, class, race & ethnicity, environment, and more.
